ARAB TRIBES IN THE KINGDOM OF SAUDI ARABIA

Riyadh QALB JAZIRAT AL-'ARAB in Arabic Vol 2, 1968 pp 129-213, 407-470

CONTENTS

[Part 3 and index from book "Heart of the Arabian Peninsula," by Fu'ad Hamzah, 470 pages]

[Text] Part Three. Arab Tribes in the Kingdom of Saudi Arabia (Comprises two chapters and detailed tables containing tribe branches)

Chapter One. Arab Tribe Genealogy¹

Arab Preservation of Their Genealogy--Difficulties in Matching Branches With Their Stems

In his book "Nihayat Al-Arab Fi Funun Al-Adab," Al-Nuwayri said, "The Arabs boasted the knowledge of their genealogy over non-Arabs (Al-'Ajam), because they were very careful to know their lineage, adhered to their noble descent, knew their peoples and races, identified their tribes eloquently by their poets and speakers, united with all their families and clans, tended toward their divisions, groups and clans, banished the intruders and spoke out vehemently."²

However, with the Arab carefulness to keep their genealogy, adhere to their descent and observe the sequence of their branches and divisions, it is quite difficult for any researcher to identify the origins of all Arab tribes in existence at the present time due to the loss of a considerable part of the writings of the ancestors about lineage and several links of the chain of ancestry during the weakness of Arab countries and differences among their heads and tribes in the Middle Ages. It is clear that during these periods, considerable tribal migration took place, with one tribe replacing another or conquering it and forcing it out of its territory and into oblivion. [132] Therefore, we did not attempt in this book to relate branches to their ancient origins except where correctness was absolutely verified; everything else was left to researchers and explorers. We confined ourselves to branches now existing, and we listed them by the names they are known by. It is noteworthy that we witnessed cases where branches of a single tribe descend from several distant origins; this arising, we presume, from the alliance of branches some time in the past at a time we cannot pinpoint.
